
The Importance Of Being On Time

'Time is relative,' said Einstein, but of course people still claim to be more ethical than logical. When we look at it from a scientific point of view, everything is a shame, and if we remember correctly, we have spent time doing that number. Paying attention to time is like listening, coming up, and paying attention to grammar, and the ethics of society bear ethics because it is accurate.

This shows that you are hardworking.

Make sure you can trust.

It shows that you respect promises and you can rely on them.

Tell them that you are responsible.

Show respect and interest in others in your own time.

Give a good example to your children and others who are looking at you.

Increase your self-confidence.

But why should it be accurate?

The value of accuracy consists in providing accurate content such as business meetings, meetings with friends, joining offices, future work, training, lessons, PRT training, additional work, and CQ orders.

The value of accuracy is necessary to ensure our personality, order, and performance. Because if you win it properly, you can do more, work better and gain confidence.

It is very important to get to work on time. There are several reasons why I have to do my job on time. It shows your knowledge, credibility, and success.

Pointing at guilt or zero is easy because the lack of accuracy speaks for itself: organize our time, get discipline and respect the time of each class.

Temptation is often the result of interest in us. For example, it is more attractive to young people to talk to friends than going to school on time. For others, it is best to eat after dinner and reach the office. The result of our favorite life is the loss of the nature of our actions, and the failure of delay is quickly confirmed.

We are the best country and the best army. Perhaps it is no longer training for all soldiers, but more than yesterday, life and the nation can save. Soldiers are considered 'people of the moment'. This is because the military organization shows its importance.

The importance of reaching an army on time (or anywhere) is only an indication of the discipline given to new soldiers during the basic training. Accuracy confirms reliability. We should demonstrate discipline, responsibility, and care following military rules and regulations. It is not only accurate and responsible but represents comrades, unity, command, and respect for the organization as a whole. Time can also avoid disciplinary actions that prevent the achievement of goals. Accuracy can have more meaning and effect than we know. If we are right, we can trust each other in situations of life and death.

What is the difficulty if you miss your training?
