

---

Things animals do like human

Elephants live for about 70 years and are animals that are very social and move in groups. Throughout their lives they build bonds and once an elephant passes they appear to mourn their death. Elephants will not leave a weak or dead one behind, they will continue to show signs of grieving for an extended period of time.

Once they see a dead one they stop and try and identify the lost one. The trunk seeks clues from smell. They touch the bones and body very lightly trying to lift the body. Then begin to throw leaves and dirt over the body and break tree branches to cover the body. They may spend days next to the body and stay very silent during this time.

Facial expressions

Have you ever felt you understand what a cat was thinking just by looking at them? Cats do have a wide range of facial expression with meaning. One of the expression is when a cat blinks his eyes slowly at another cat or a person. He may also come closer and gently bump his head against your forehead. This is a sign of trust.

Curiosity will be shown his eyes are open contraction of the pupils while looking at the something. His ears will be up while cats that are afraid may blink excessively and tilt their heads. Cat eyes that stare from a distance can be a sign of control and aggression. Staring with an open mouth might be showing the Flehmen response which is the is a behavior in which an animal curls back its upper lip exposing its front teeth, The behavior facilitates the transfer of pheromones and other scents into the vomeronasal organ. The organ provides more information about certain scents

Lies and deceit

The fork-tailed drongo is a bird found across most of sub-Saharan Africa. The insect-eating bird are usually has glossy black feathers. The birds sometimes make false alarms causing other birds to stop eating and run away leaving the bird to steal the food.

The cowbirds are also very interesting and will have chicks without any hard work. They tend to lay their eggs in the nest of other birds. When the eggs hatch the hosts will get tricked into rearing the chicks. If it happens that the host throws the cowbird's egg, the cowbird will destroy the host's nest.

Courtship

The Adelie penguin is a species of penguin common along the entire Antarctic coast. They have white rings surrounding the eyes and all black head. The appearance looks like a tuxedo. Most penguins spend most of their life at sea and return to land to reproduce. A male penguin will search for a smooth and perfect pebbles to give his intended mate he then places then pebble at her feet, if she accepts it she will put it in her nest. They will bond and mate. Pebble are very important to penguins and may fight and steal them from each other.

---

eduzaurus.com